- 56 Letters
On restitution and the Marston affair
- Charles G. Douglas, III 57 Query
Could jurors reach a verdict on judges, too?
- John T. Wold 58 Going through the motions: the monotony of appellate court decisionmaking
The high volume of cases—and their routine nature—makes the California Courts of Appeal an “assembly line,” a recent survey says.

- Yale Kamisar 66 Is the exclusionary rule an ‘illogical’ or ‘unnatural’ interpretation of the Fourth Amendment?
When the police obtain evidence in violation of the Constitution, the courts must exclude it to assure the people that the government cannot profit from its lawlessness.
- Steven W. Hays 85 Should courts try management by objectives?
Through MBO, a state court system could establish centralized goals, but local districts would decide how to achieve the objectives.
- R. Neal McKnight, Roger Schaefer and Charles A. Johnson 94 Choosing judges: do the voters know what they’re doing?
Voters usually don’t know who the judicial candidates are, a Texas study shows, but maybe it isn’t their own fault.
