- Howell Heflin 258 Query
Can the state court experience guide efforts to improve the federal system?
- Peter W. Sperlich 262 ... And then there were six: the decline of the American jury
In the last 10 years, the Supreme Court has allowed states to reduce the jury's size and abolish the unanimous verdict. But the Court generally ignored social science evidence that shows the importance of both these factors to the jury in performing its traditional role.
- Peter W. Sperlich 280 Social science evidence in the courts: reaching beyond the adversary process
The Supreme Court should begin to develop ways of validating the scientific evidence it uses in making major social policy decisions.
- James L. Hoyt 290 Prohibiting courtroom cameras: it's up to the judge in Florida and Wisconsin
Most states make it a blanket rule: if a participant objects to cameras in the court, the judge must turn them off. Two states, however, are trying a different policy: they let the judge decide what to do.
