108 Letters

On jury note-taking and determinate sentencing.

- Bruce Littlejohn 109 —Ensuring lawyer competency: the South Carolina approach
—The supreme court has adopted three new rules in an effort to end the problem of the law school graduate who isn't prepared to try cases.

- Elliot E. Slotnick 114 Reforms in judicial selection: will they affect the Senate's role? (Part II)
By establishing nominating commissions, many senators are giving women and minorities a new opportunity to participate in judicial selection and be chosen for the bench. But they reject the notion of guaranteeing every group its 'fair share' of judgeships.

- John Baldwin and Michael McConville — 132 Does the composition of an English jury affect its verdict?
English juries aren't representative of the whole community, a new study shows, but their verdicts generally don't reflect their imbalances.

- Albert P. Melone — 140 A political scientist writes in defense of The Brethren

- 145 Does television make a fair trial impossible?—a debate
