CONTENTS

EDITOR'S NOTES	109
THEORY
Bowen Systems Theory and Mediation Wayne Regina In an effort to develop a theoretical basis for mediation practice, the author proposes that systems theory as proposed by Bowen can provide a rich conceptual framework for mediation.	111
PRACTICE
The Mediator as Nonviolent Advocate: Revisiting the Question of Mediator Neutrality David Dyck The author challenges the commonly accepted principle of neutrality, suggesting that mediators should apply the notions of nonviolent advocacy to guide their interventions.	129
From Restoration to Transformation: Victim-Offender Mediation as Transformative Justice Robert Carl Schehr In this article, the author examines the steps required to transform victim-offender mediation from a coercive process to one that empowers offenders.	151
Improving Mediator Competence Through Self-Assessment Sue Bronson This article presents a model of mediator self-assessment that can lead to increased mediator competence.	171

RESEARCH

Divorce Adjustment and Mediation: Theoretically Grounded
Process Research

181

Andrew J. Bickerdike, Lyn Littlefield

The findings of the author's research suggest that specific behaviors in mediation are predictive of the mediation outcome.
